Course Description

This training will provide historical context for the more limited categorizations of gender, attraction, and expression beyond binary categories as well as the behavioral health specific context of pathologization of gender, attraction, and expression. Beyond understanding history and context, participants will also gain a deeper understanding of concepts related to gender, attraction, and expression that may have previously been part of an LGBTQIA+ or SOGIE 101 training including an intersectional framework. This training will provide best practice guidelines as well as actionable changes that will be implemented to better support clients in service delivery, especially clients who may not be cisgender or heterosexual.

Trainers:

Isabella Garcia (they/she)

Management Analyst for The County of Santa Clara BHSD Program The Q Corner and Professor in the Public Health and Recreation Department at SJSU with a background in Psychology, Sociology and Public Health.

Emmett Marsh (he/they)

Health Education Specialist, with The Q Corner Program with a background in Psychology, and a love for working with the LGBTQIA+ community with a focus on providing transition resources and support for community.

Sela Castro (she/her)

Community Outreach Specialist with the Q Corner with a background in communication studies. Sela previously worked as a DV crisis advocate where she learned how to provide trauma-informed support for survivors. Sela also feels very strongly about making communal spaces and community resources accessible and welcoming to folks, especially for the LGBTQIA+ and Spanish speaking community.
